

HR Interview Questions and Answers

Section 1: Common HR Interview Questions

How should I answer: Tell me about yourself?

Keep the answer to about one to two minutes and structure it as present, past and future. Start with your current status, such as your degree and branch. Mention relevant skills, projects or internships. End with your interest in the role and why you want it. Do not read out your resume or share unnecessary personal details.

How should I answer: What are your strengths?

Choose two or three strengths that match the job, such as problem solving, quick learning, teamwork or consistency. Support each with a short real example that shows the strength in action. Avoid generic claims without proof.

How should I answer: What is your weakness?

Pick a real but manageable weakness that is not critical for the job, and explain the steps you are taking to improve it. For example, you may say you used to hesitate in public speaking, and you now present in class and join discussion groups to improve. Avoid saying you have no weakness, and avoid fake weaknesses such as being a perfectionist.

How should I answer: Why should we hire you?

Connect your skills and projects to what the company needs. Briefly state your relevant technical skills, your ability to learn quickly, your attitude and your interest in the role. Keep the focus on the value you will bring to the company.

How should I answer: Why do you want to join our company?

Research the company before the interview. Mention its products, culture, learning opportunities or growth, and connect them to your career goals. Avoid answers based only on salary or brand name.

How should I answer: Where do you see yourself in five years?

Show ambition that is realistic and linked to the role. For example, say you want to build strong technical skills, take on more responsibility and grow within the company. Avoid saying you plan to leave or start a business.

Section 2: Behavioural and Situational Questions

What is the STAR method?

STAR is a structure for answering behavioural questions. Situation describes the context. Task explains your responsibility. Action describes what you personally did. Result explains the outcome, ideally with numbers or a clear impact. It keeps answers clear and focused.

How should I answer: Tell me about a time you worked in a team.

Use the STAR method. Describe a real team project, your specific role, how you handled communication or disagreement, and the final result. Show cooperation, responsibility and respect for others.

How should I answer: Tell me about a time you failed.

Choose a genuine example, such as a missed deadline or a project that did not work as planned. Take responsibility without blaming others, explain what you learned, and show how you changed your approach afterward.

How should I answer: How do you handle pressure or tight deadlines?

Explain that you prioritise tasks, break work into smaller steps, stay organised and communicate early if help is needed. Give a short example, such as completing a project before an exam week.

How should I answer: Are you willing to relocate or work in shifts?

Answer honestly. If you are flexible, say so and show willingness to adapt. If you have a limitation, explain it politely and offer alternatives rather than a flat refusal.

What should I do if I do not know the answer to a question?

Stay calm and be honest. Say you are not sure, explain how you would approach finding the answer, and mention any related knowledge you have. Never make up an answer.

Section 3: Interview Etiquette and Preparation

How should I prepare for an HR round?

Research the company, review the job description, prepare answers to common questions, keep two or three real stories ready for behavioural questions, practise speaking aloud, and prepare questions to ask the interviewer.

What should I wear and how should I behave in an interview?

Dress in clean, formal or business-casual clothes. Arrive at least 15 minutes early, greet everyone politely, maintain natural eye contact, sit straight, listen carefully and avoid interrupting. Switch your phone to silent.

What questions should I ask the interviewer?

Ask about the team and role, the training and learning opportunities, what success looks like in the first months, and the next steps in the hiring process. Avoid asking about salary and leave in the first round.

What should I do after the interview?

Send a short thank-you message or email if possible, reflect on what went well and what to improve, and follow up politely if you do not hear back within the stated time.
